

 Search

Marin mixes country folk with Zappa punk

Home
Arts
Sports
Arts
Wednesday, July 25, 2007

Business
Life
Letters
By Genevieve Keevil
Opinions
Mike Thomas Yukon News
Multimedia

Roger Marin is performing in parts of the territory.

Roger Marin was still sleeping when Gordie Tentrees banged on the door.

It was quarter past 12 on Friday, and the crowd at Arts in the Park was waiting patiently.

“That’s today?” said a groggy Marin.

Five minutes later, he jumped on the stage at LePage Park, his hair still mussed up.

“That’s the fastest time between waking up and playing a show,” he said with a laugh.

“I thought the gig was tomorrow.”

As Marin broke into Whiskey Keeps my Engine Clean, Tentrees showed up with a bottle of water and a coffee.

After downing the water, Marin looked a little better.

“Is this a straight set,” he asked organizer Steve Slade after the first few songs.

“Are there any breaks?”

After several more songs, including one with the line, “The girl with the dirty hair said she’d be mine,” Marin ran across the street to the Java Connection.

He came back after about five minutes, his hair slicked down with water.

“I just have to tell you right now, I’m pretty hung over,” he told the crowd, explaining he’d played Coaster’s the night before.

“I thought I’d start with one song and just get through it, but to tell you the truth, I still feel pretty rough.”

The hangover didn’t stop Marin from telling stories.

Apparently, the band barely made it up the Alaska Highway. The clutch is slipping in the van, he said.

“We’re from Ontario, and I didn’t realize you had so many mountains up here — on some of those hills the guys had to get out of the van and start pushing just to make it over.”

Marin likes teasing his rhythm section.

After the abrupt morning wakeup, Marin yelled at the guys — “Come on, you’re playing with me, this isn’t a solo show.”

Grumbling, they had started getting dressed when Marin breezed out the door with a “Just joking.”

“I love pissing them off,” he said with a laugh, before breaking into a song about aging Blondie and Dagwood.

The song was off his most recent album, High Roads.

After touring with Fred Eaglesmith for six years, Marin got sick of life on the road and went solo.

“But after quitting I went home for a month and realized it’s not for me — so I went back out on the road,” he said.

He’s been touring since he was seven.

“I was too young to be in the bars, so I’d have to sit in the kitchen on breaks,” Marin told the crowd.

As a kid, Marin played country with his dad, joining him for five or six songs a night.

By the time he was 14, he was playing for a living.

“I’ve never done anything else,” he said, perched on the edge of the stage after his show.

Although he’s pegged a country-folk musician, Marin calls some of his songs punk.

“As a songwriter, I don’t have a genre of music anymore,” he said.

“It’s more about the words — the music is a background for the words.”

If they’re angry words, the song is more punk, said Marin.

Sporting long hair and goatees, Marin’s rhythm section is also more punk than country.

“Without me they’re like Frank Zappa times 5,000,” said Marin.

“But add me and I bring it back 5,000 times.”

In August, Marin is hosting a music festival in Niagara Falls.

Tentrees is playing it, as is Tom Wilson and one of the Dixie Chicks.

But there will also be a lot of unknown bands taking the stage.

“One of the credentials to play the festival is if you can’t get a gig anywhere else,” said Marin with a grin.

Seven years ago, the country rocker played Dawson City Music Fest with Eaglesmith, and after touring the territory last summer, he hoped to play the festival again.

But he didn’t get in.

Instead he crashed the Dawson festival’s Whitehorse meet-and-greet, drank lots of free booze and ate all the food.

“I didn’t even have to play a show and I got all the benefits of the Dawson City Music Fest,” he said with a laugh.

This fall, he and Tentrees are heading from Toronto to Texas on tour.

Marin, who plays about 250 shows a year, sometimes questions his schedule.

“But when I’m not doing it, I realize it’s a pretty cool thing to do,” he said.

The Roger Marin Band played The Pit in Dawson this week, and will be back at Coaster’s on Thursday and Friday night.

 SHARE    0 Comments

There are currently no comments on this story. Comment now and be the first!

Add a comment

The Yukon News has provided readers with the opportunity to post their views and opinions regarding any stories published on its website to foster dynamic discussions. Posts will be reviewed by a moderator before being published, but will not be edited or altered except for spelling and grammatical errors. Comments on this site are not the opinions of the Yukon News and comments with personal attacks, vulgar language, libelous statements or falsified facts will not be permitted. Only registered users of the website can contribute to the online conversations.

Commenting is not available in this weblog entry.

18°C
Mainly Sunny
Sunrise 5:56 am
Sunset 10:16 pm

Special Report

A Yukon News investigation into the territory's addiction to booze.

Read all 14 stories

Popular Stories

- Residents frame houses as safety risk
- Boat capsizes, RCMP officer missing
- Ambulance crew moves to Two Mile Hill, after toddler dies in Takhini
- Search continues for missing Mountie
- Hart's less-than-helpful reminders

Opinions

•

Al Pope

With instincts like these, who needs data? Jul 30

•

Rick Steele

A geek in the woods Jul 30

•

Michael Gates

The Fortymile River makes for challenging history Jul 30

•

Macbride Museum Sourdough Stories

Collector showcases Klondike headstones Jul 28

more Opinions >

Multimedia

•

Rockin' The Klondike

A view of the Dawson City Music Festival through the eyes of musician Dan Mangan.

Water Quest

Paddlers from around the world are making their way to Dawson City, Yukon, in the 740-kilometre long Yukon River Quest - the longest annual canoe and kayak race.

A Day to Celebrate

First Nations celebrate their culture during National Aboriginal Day at Shipyards Park in Whitehorse.

more Multimedia >

Wyatt's World

Click to enlarge >

In Our Print Edition

 Yukon News on Facebook

Like

1,510 people like Yukon News

Maggie-Ann	Simone	Jason	Jeremy	P

Elsie	Charlie	Field	Joleene	Misty

Yukon News on Facebook >

- Classifieds
- Display Ads
- Archives & Reprints
- Search
- RSS Feeds

- About Us
- Contact Us
- Privacy Policy
- Rights & Permissions
- Terms of Use
- © Copyright 2010 Yukon News All Rights Reserved